

HOUSING RECOVERY SUPPORT FUNCTION

INITIAL HOUSING IMPACT ASSESSMENT ALABAMA TORNADOES

1. Introduction

This initial assessment was written in accordance with the Housing Recovery Support Function (RSF), an annex to the U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS) 2010 National Disaster Recovery Framework (NDRF) in response to the severe storms and tornados that hit Alabama on April of 2011. The initial assessment's objectives are to:

- Identify the scope of the disaster impact on the state's housing resources and recovery capabilities to determine where long-term housing recovery assistance may be needed.
- Avoid duplication of effort and promote efficiency by leveraging or participating in existing assessments and coordination platforms.
- Promote partnerships and mutual assistance among State, local, and federal stakeholders.

This initial assessment is intended to be a contribution to the larger dialogue on the topic of housing recovery for the disaster-affected area. It is not meant to be all inclusive or prescriptive. To the extent possible, it will reflect the priorities, input and data supplied by State officials, FEMA and federal staff in the field, and other local stakeholders to contribute to the discussion of what information would be most useful to those involved in the rebuilding of Alabama.

The document is structured as follows:

Section 2 provides pre disaster demographic and housing stock characteristics of affected counties.

Section 3 provides rough estimates of the level of damage, the location of damage, affected people and housing and an initial assessment of how vulnerable to disaster and to recovery affected areas are.

Section 4 provides some

2. Demographic and Housing Stock Characteristics Pre-Disaster

The state of Alabama was hit by severe storms, tornadoes, straight-line winds and flooding beginning on April 15, 2011. A preliminary estimation by PD&R of affected people and housing units identified Tuscaloosa, Jefferson, DeKalb, and Cullman as some of the hardest hit counties, where either a larger share of the population or the housing stock was affected; or where there was a high count of affected people and housing units.

The Presidential disaster declaration number 1971 granted individual assistance (IA) to 43 of the 67 counties in Alabama.¹ As shown on Table 1.1, there are 3.1 million people living in these counties, or approximately 67% of the state's population.

Demographics

There are two demographic dimensions that help understand how vulnerable communities are to disaster and how difficult it might be for them to recover. The first relates to the share of vulnerable groups, such as those living in poverty, minorities, elderly people, and people with disabilities. The second relates to the share of the housing stock that is less likely to recover without assistance, such as owner occupied units without home insurance, renter occupied single family units, older houses, and manufactured homes.

As shown on Table 1.1, counties with IA are in general not that different than the remaining counties in the state in terms of their share of vulnerable population and of houses that might be harder to recover without assistance. In comparison with the remaining counties in the state, counties with IA have a lower share of Blacks (22.6%) and a larger share of Hispanics (3.2%) and of people who don't speak English well or at all (1.5%). These counties have a slightly smaller share of other vulnerable groups, such as those living in poverty and receiving public assistance, than the remaining counties in the state.

Housing

The housing stock in counties with IA is characterized by a smaller share of vacancies (13.8% of all housing units) and by a larger share of owner occupied housing (72.2% of all occupied housing units) than the remaining counties in the state. The counties with IA tend to have a smaller share of renter with severe rent burden (24.6% are paying more than 50% of their income in gross rent), an older housing stock (22.7% of houses were built before 1950), and a larger share of renter occupied multi-family housing units (48.6% of all renter-occupied units) than the remaining counties in the state. The percentage of manufactured housing (mobile homes) units (owner and renter-occupied) is, in average, similar to the remaining counties in the state.

Tuscaloosa was the hardest hit county, with an estimated 2.2% of the population affected and an estimated 2.5% of the housing stock affected (see estimations on Table 2.1). As shown on Table 1.1, the county has a higher percentage of Blacks, of people living in poverty, and of households receiving public assistance than the state's average. The housing stock is newer and owner occupied units have a higher median value than the state as whole. The county has a higher percentage of renters and a higher percentage of renters with severe rent burden than the state as whole, but two thirds of units are multi-family, where the structure may be more likely to be covered by insurance (as compared to single family rental housing).

Jefferson was the county with the second highest count of estimated affected population and housing stock, although in percentage terms, the tornadoes only affected an estimated 0.3% of the population and housing stock in the county. The county is more affluent than the others hit by the tornadoes. It has a median household income above the state's average and a smaller share of people living in poverty. The housing stock doesn't seem to be as vulnerable to recovery as in other communities. The county has the smallest share of vacancies, a high share of owner occupied units with mortgages, a high share of multi-family renter occupied units and a very small share of manufactured homes.

DeKalb and Cullman were the second and third hardest hit counties in percentage terms, with an estimated 0.7% of the population and housing stock affected in DeKalb and around 0.6% of the population in Cullman. The counties have a larger share of people over 62 years old and of people with disabilities. The housing stock is particularly vulnerable to recovery, with a large percentage of owner occupied houses without mortgage, a large percentage of renter occupied units that are single family houses, and a very large percentage of manufactured homes.

The proportion of homes owned without mortgage is shown as 39.2% for the counties declared for Individual Assistance. This is higher than the national average of 31.7% (as reported by the American Housing Survey table 3-15). Homes owned without mortgage are considered important as those homes may not have homeowners insurance (as there is no requirement for an escrow account or involvement of a mortgage company).

3. Damage and Rebuilding Estimates

Until a more precise count of the population and housing units affected by the storms is finalized, a rough estimate of affected population and housing was produced. Table 2.1 shows the total population and housing units likely affected by the tornados according to this estimation that uses the overlay of damage shape files provided by the National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency (NGA) and population and housing unit estimates from the American Community Survey (ACS).² These estimates suggest that 8,330 people and 3,965 housing units were located in areas that suffered damage from the storms. Roughly 50% of the population and housing stock was located in Tuscaloosa, 25% was located in Jefferson, 6% was located in DeKalb and Cullman, and 13% was located in the other counties listed on Table 2.1.

The damage affected some demographic groups more than others. Table 2.2 shows that Blacks were disproportionately affected by the storms. Blacks constitute 26% of the population in the state of Alabama and yet 40% of the population likely affected by the storms is presumed to be black. The majority of this population is located in Tuscaloosa and Jefferson. Hispanics were also affected disproportionately, with the larger concentrations in Tuscaloosa and Cullman.

Other vulnerable groups, such as children and elderly people, were affected in proportion to their share in the state's population. There were a higher proportion of children affected in Tuscaloosa and DeKalb, while elderly people were more concentrated in Jefferson, DeKalb, and Cullman. Cullman also has the highest proportion of adults who don't speak English well or at all. Unfortunately, the ACS does not permit estimating the number of people with disabilities that were affected.

The storms affected disproportionately units that were occupied by renters. Renters constitute 29.2% of the stock of occupied housing units in the state of Alabama and yet it is likely that 44% of the units affected by the storms were occupied by renters. In addition, the storm disproportionately affected those renters with severe rent burden (paying more than 50% of their income in rent). There are 1,452 renter occupied units likely affected by the storms, of which 490 units have severe rent burden. Roughly 75% of likely affected renters and 87% of those with severe rent burden are concentrated in Tuscaloosa. Because renters may have less insurance and ability to move more freely, the loss of rental housing may tend to disproportionately affect the poorer members of the community.

There are 1,876 owner occupied units likely affected by the storms. Of those, 61% have a mortgage and 39% does not have a mortgage. Jefferson had the highest share of owner occupied housing units affected. In Tuscaloosa, Jefferson, Cullman and the rest of the counties, the majority of owner occupied units has a mortgage and thus is likely to be covered by home insurance. DeKalb is the only county where the majority of owner occupied housing units does not have a mortgage.

Manufactured homes were proportionally less affected by the storms. While the state of Alabama has 11.5% of housing units that are manufactured homes, only 6% of housing units likely affected by the storms are manufactured homes. DeKalb and other counties had the highest share of manufactured homes affected by the storms.

Vulnerability index. In an attempt to integrate the two dimensions of vulnerability to disaster discussed previously, an indicator of “vulnerable neighborhoods” was created to capture the relative vulnerability to recovery. The index attempts to find neighborhoods that likely have lower insurance coverage and/or higher percentages of vulnerable populations. The index uses the percent of households receiving public assistance, of owners without a mortgage, of occupied units that are rental, of units that are manufactured homes, of people over 62, and of adults who don’t speak English well or at all. Neighborhoods are ranked according to these weighed factors and those in the first three deciles are deemed vulnerable (see Appendix X for a description of the methodology used).

Table 2.3 shows the percent of the population likely affected that were located in neighborhoods more vulnerable to recovery.

Rebuilding Estimates. The ability of property owners to rebuild will determine the amount of assistance that individuals and communities will need to recover. It is likely that property owners with insurance will have the resources to rebuild their properties on their own. Although we still don't have information on affected property owners that have insurance, it is possible to assume that owner occupied units with mortgages will be more likely to be insured and to have the resources to rebuild. On the other hand, owner occupied units without mortgages and single-family rental units will have more limited resources to rebuild on their own.

For the 3,328 occupied housing units that were likely damaged:

More likely to rebuild: a total of 1,140 owner occupied housing units with mortgages are likely to have the resources to rebuild.

Less likely to rebuild: a total of 1,331 units are less likely to rebuild on their own. This estimate includes 736 owner occupied housing units and 595 single-family units that are renter occupied that were likely affected by the storms. If the per unit value of properties without mortgages is applied to these units, it is possible to assume that the rebuilding of these properties will cost $91 million for owner occupied units and $74 million for single-family rental properties.

Uncertainty: there are a total of 857 rental properties where it is less clear whether landlords are going to invest in the properties and rebuild. This is particularly worrisome because the storm disproportionately affected this market.

Analysis of preliminary FEMA registrant data³ indicates inspections have been completed on the homes of 24,327 registrants. Of that number the split between insured and uninsured properties was 48.9% insured and 51.1% uninsured. This is comparable with the registrant information which indicates that 54% of the registrants reported some form of insurance (“mobile” home (owner/renter), homeowners, renter/owner contents only, or condo/townhouse with personal property)).

4. Reconstruction, Building Codes and Housing Availability

Reconstruction. Because the scope of the damage in the communities affected may not have been catastrophic in the sense that the neighborhoods or communities were destroyed, it is likely most reconstruction will be on a one-for-one basis. If a disaster is truly catastrophic, the discussion of reconstruction should make sense to consider a new strategy for redevelopment, including revised land use for the affected communities. For such land use changes to occur, a high percentage of the property would need to be destroyed. In the absence of such conditions, it is likely individual property owners will, with varying degrees of urgency, initiate reconstruction to repair or rebuild their homes.

Building Codes and Permits. An examination of the International Code Council building code adoptions⁴ in Alabama shows widespread adoption of one of the versions of the International Code Council family. The ICC codes are published on a three year cycle (2003, 2006, 2009, etc). The codes of greatest relevance are the International Residential Code (IRC) and International Building Code (IBC). The other codes are either referenced in the IRC or IBC and typically apply in a more limited area. The IRC applies to 1-4 unit buildings and townhouses (rowhouses). The more recent versions of the code have higher energy performance requirements and may have some additional structural requirements for strength. Typically, a weak spot in the implementation of codes is the builder awareness of the requirements and the ability of the community to actually inspect to ensure the work is done as required. In the aftermath of a disaster, the community may not have an adequate number of code inspectors to address the surge in construction. Because changing the construction standards changes the way builders work, it is critical that the homebuilders understand the new requirements. Field staff from the ICC may be in position to assist with the transition to newer codes.

A table showing the permitting activities in the declared counties is attached. This table shows a surge in residential construction permits in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina in 2005 and then the permit (and the construction activity that lags the permits) returning to lower levels.

³ Review of preliminary FEMA registrations (June 2011)

⁴ www.iccsafe.org/gr/Pages/adoptions.aspx

Housing Availability. A report of the National Housing Locator indicates that 2285 housing units have been registered at an average rental cost of $964. As shown in Table 1.1, the proportion of renters with a gross rent over $1,000 was only 9.4%. This would suggest that without assistance, many of the units on the National Housing Locator will be unavailable to those displaced by the tornado.

HUD reports 568 units of HUD owned housing available for sale. Because the condition of those units may vary, each unit would need to be assessed to ensure it could be brought to an acceptable level of habitability quickly and affordably. A listing of those units is attached.

Data are based on a sample and are subject to sampling variability. The degree of uncertainty for an estimate arising from sampling variability is represented through the use of a margin of error. The value shown here is the 90 percent margin of error. The margin of error can be interpreted roughly as providing a 90 percent probability that the interval defined by the estimate minus the margin of error and the estimate plus the margin of error (the lower and upper confidence bounds) contains the true value. In addition to sampling variability, the ACS estimates are subject to nonsampling error (for a discussion of nonsampling variability, see Accuracy of the Data). The effect of nonsampling error is not represented in these tables.

Notes:

- Housing unit weight is used throughout this table (only exception is the average household and family size cells).
- Average family size is derived by dividing the number of related people in households by the number of family households.
- While the 2005-2009 American Community Survey (ACS) data generally reflect the November 2008 Office of Management and Budget (OMB) definitions of metropolitan and micropolitan statistical areas; in certain instances the names, codes, and boundaries of the principal cities shown in ACS tables may differ from the OMB definitions due to differences in the effective dates of the geographic entities.
- Estimates of urban and rural population, housing units, and characteristics reflect boundaries of urban areas defined based on Census 2000 data. Boundaries for urban areas have not been updated since Census 2000. As a result, data for urban and rural areas from the ACS do not necessarily reflect the results of ongoing urbanization.

Explanation of Symbols:

1. An '' entry in the margin of error column indicates that either no sample observations or too few sample observations were available to compute a standard error and thus the margin of error. A statistical test is not appropriate.
2. An '-' entry in the estimate column indicates that either no sample observations or too few sample observations were available to compute an estimate, or a ratio of medians cannot be calculated because one or both of the median estimates falls in the lowest interval or upper interval of an open-ended distribution.
3. An '-' following a median estimate means the median falls in the lowest interval of an open-ended distribution.
4. An '+' following a median estimate means the median falls in the upper interval of an open-ended distribution.
5. An '' entry in the margin of error column indicates that the median falls in the lowest interval or upper interval of an open-ended distribution. A statistical test is not appropriate.
6. An '*' entry in the margin of error column indicates that the estimate is controlled. A statistical test for sampling variability is not appropriate.
7. An 'N' entry in the estimate and margin of error columns indicates that data for this geographic area cannot be displayed because the number of sample cases is too small.
8. An '(X)' means that the estimate is not applicable or not available.

Data are based on a sample and are subject to sampling variability. The degree of uncertainty for an estimate arising from sampling variability is represented through the use of a margin of error. The value shown here is the 90 percent margin of error. The margin of error can be interpreted roughly as providing a 90 percent probability that the interval defined by the estimate minus the margin of error and the estimate plus the margin of error (the lower and upper confidence bounds) contains the true value. In addition to sampling variability, the ACS estimates are subject to nonsampling error (for a discussion of nonsampling variability, see Accuracy of the Data). The effect of nonsampling error is not represented in these tables.

Notes:

- Housing unit weight is used throughout this table (only exception is the average household and family size cells).
- Average family size is derived by dividing the number of related people in households by the number of family households.
- While the 2005-2009 American Community Survey (ACS) data generally reflect the November 2008 Office of Management and Budget (OMB) definitions of metropolitan and micropolitan statistical areas; in certain instances the names, codes, and boundaries of the principal cities shown in ACS tables may differ from the OMB definitions due to differences in the effective dates of the geographic entities.
- Estimates of urban and rural population, housing units, and characteristics reflect boundaries of urban areas defined based on Census 2000 data. Boundaries for urban areas have not been updated since Census 2000. As a result, data for urban and rural areas from the ACS do not necessarily reflect the results of ongoing urbanization.

Explanation of Symbols:

1. An '' entry in the margin of error column indicates that either no sample observations or too few sample observations were available to compute a standard error and thus the margin of error. A statistical test is not appropriate.
2. An 'I' entry in the estimate column indicates that either no sample observations or too few sample observations were available to compute an estimate, or a ratio of medians cannot be calculated because one or both of the median estimates falls in the lowest interval or upper interval of an open-ended distribution.
3. An 'L' following a median estimate means the median falls in the lowest interval of an open-ended distribution.
4. An 'U' following a median estimate means the median falls in the upper interval of an open-ended distribution.
5. An '*' entry in the margin of error column indicates that the median falls in the lowest interval or upper interval of an open-ended distribution. A statistical test is not appropriate.
6. An '' entry in the margin of error column indicates that the estimate is controlled. A statistical test for sampling variability is not appropriate.
7. An 'N' entry in the estimate and margin of error columns indicates that data for this geographic area cannot be displayed because the number of sample cases is too small.
8. An '(X)' means that the estimate is not applicable or not available.

Methods:

- 1) We overlaid NGA damage shapefiles over ACS 2005-2009 5 yr data (blockgroup level geography).
- 2) Then, we created an aerial weight of blockgroup ACS variables by damage area and aggregated by Census Tract and County to produce the tables below.
- 3) The “vulnerable neighborhoods” indicator is an index of relative vulnerability to recovery. The index attempts to find neighborhoods that likely have lower insurance coverage and/or higher percentages of vulnerable populations.
 - a. First, we compiled various neighborhood indicators from the ACS at the census tract level and created z-scores for each one.
 - b. Then, we grouped each variable’s z-scores into decile rankings and added the decile scores of the following variables with their corresponding weights:

Percent of Households Receiving Public Assistance (100%)

Percent of Owners with No Mortgage (100%)

Percent of Occupied Units that are Rental (50%)

Percent of Occupied Units that are Mobile Homes (50%)

Percent of Population over Age 62 (50%)

Percent of Population that Speak Little or No English (50%)

Note, we chose to weight Public Assistance and Owners without a Mortgage the most, because we believe that together, predict neighborhoods vulnerable to quick recovery. The additional variables are weighted only 50% since they are somewhat correlated with one of the fully weighted variables.

- c. We then put the final score into deciles. Those in the top 3 deciles (8,9,10) are deemed “vulnerable neighborhoods” in the tables below.
